Old Mannville

Andreas and the second state of the second sta

Old Mannville was a cluster of commercial and residential buildings constructed on land originally homesteaded by Dan McLean. In anticipation of the arrival of the Canadian Noethern Railway, J.B. Burch built a sore here in 1904, along the milway's right of way. In the expectation that his homestead would be chosen as a railway townsite, McLean built a post office to go along with Burch's store.

Soon other entreprenetars set up businesses in the community, and at its peak Old Mannville boasted two general stores, a drugstore, a hotel, and a livery stable. In the summer of 1905, however, this local boom went bust. The railway chose another townsite a few kilometres to the cast and Old Mannville was abandoned.
